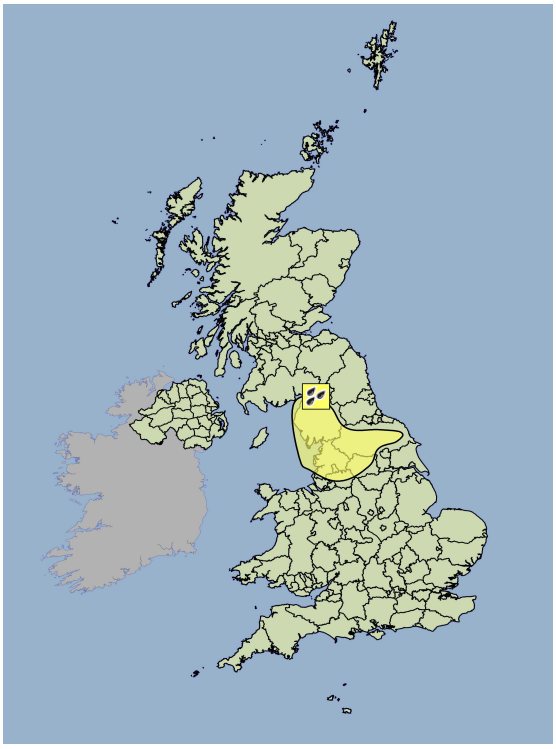
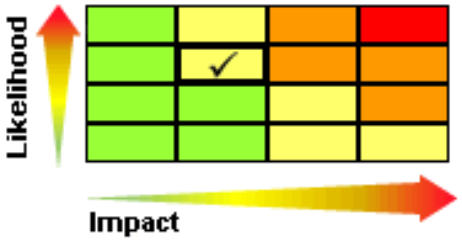
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A series of low pressure systems will bring mild and moist air to northern England on Monday and again on Tuesday along with some strong winds. This will lead to some large rainfall accumulations over the high ground with over 80 mm possible over the peaks during Monday and Tuesday. Following the wet November the ground is saturated and rivers are expected to rise in response to the rainfall with a low risk of flooding. Whilst lowland areas are expected to see much smaller rainfall amounts as the water moves downstream through the river network further areas of flooding are possible.

There is some uncertainty around the behaviour of these individual systems and so the persistence of the rainfall. This alert is likely to be updated in the coming days.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 06:00 on Mon, 30th Nov 2015 until 23:45 on Tue, 01st Dec 2015

Rain is expected to move across northern England from early on Monday with the largest rainfall totals over high ground. This will clear southwards later on Monday before returning from the south on Tuesday. With this following the wet November the ground is saturated and rivers are expected to rise in response to the rainfall.

Please be aware of the potential for disruption from flooding, even away from the heaviest rainfall as the water moves through the river network.
